Financial institutions

It is common for financial institutions to start with a credit life product and add additional benefits over time, such as cover for family members. Some institutions then offer voluntary riders to give borrowers a choice, even if the core insurance offering is mandatory. Many financial institutions have even developed the expertise and infrastructure to offer voluntary cover to non-borrowers. Their experiences shows that financial institutions can provide insurance products that are valuable for clients and that also help improve the stability and growth of the institution.

Source URL: http://www.impactinsurance.org/topic/distribution/subtopic/financial-institutions